

Innovative Teaching Fund

The Center for Teaching and Learning (CTL) is pleased to offer financial support for experiments with new and/or innovative teaching practices. This funding is designed to support the implementation of a new or innovative project or pedagogy aimed at supporting student learning, such as an imaginative approach to student collaboration, a creative use of instructional technology, or a new means of encouraging students to self-regulate their learning.

All full time employees with faculty rank are eligible to apply for up to $300 to support their innovative project or pedagogy. Requests for much smaller amounts are welcome! These funds are meant to support the implementation of activities not already funded through other units on campus, including the library, divisions, or dean's office. As such, requests for funds to support field trips, guest speakers, books, and stipends will not be considered. Requests for food or catering services will be considered, but should be a small part of the overall request.

Applications will be accepted on a rolling basis and reviewed by CTL staff on the first of each month, August through April. To apply, please submit a statement of two paragraphs that includes a brief description of your project or pedagogy, an explanation of how you anticipate this project or pedagogy will improve student learning and/or their classroom experience, and a budget. Applications should be submitted via email to ctl@centre.edu.

This funding was created to support a broad set of project ideas and pedagogies and is being offered in lieu of CBL and technology mini-grants. Innovative uses of CBL and technology will be supported through this fund. Please contact Sarah Lashley with any questions.
